The Asian Seismological Commission (ASC) was established in 1996 as a regional scientific organization affiliated to International Association of Seismology and Physics of the Earth's Interior (IASPEI). Since 1996, ASC has organized several General Assemblies in different Asian countries. The essence of the policy enhancement is that ASC should play an important role as a catalyst and coordinator for Earthquake Hazard Assessment and Risk Management Strategy developed and implemented in the Asia-Pacific region for the prevention of earthquake hazards impact on population, vital infrastructure and property.

Host: The 13th assembly of the ASC is hosted by the National Research Institute of Astronomy and Geophysics (NRIAG), Cairo, Egypt. NRIAG has very long history of Astronomical and Geophysical observation since it was established on the year 1839 as a Royal observatory at Bollak. In 1903 NRIAG has been moved to the current location at Helwan, making it the oldest research institute in North Africa.

Venue: Sharm El Sheikh is a major Egyptian city and tourist destination located at the southern point of the Sinai Peninsula along the Red Sea. There is a huge sea shore line which makes the city an attractive place to visit.
